

I support satellite radio because, for the first time in many years, there is a way to enjoy the music of my choice without the jarring babble of commercials and announcers. For those who choose to not pay a subscription, they are welcome to whatever commercial radio provides. It is all about choices. The 'weather and traffic' issue is bogus. I drive through Atlanta several times a week and there is no current way to know accurately and in a timely manner what is happening on the roads. When XM gets its traffic and weather service operational in that area, I will be an avid listener.

Again, it's about choices. It will never be a choice between XM and FM, it will be a choice between XM and silence, or XM and CD's.
